During the modern era, exciting new innovations in the world of building construction has brought soaring skyscrapers and fresh new approaches to building design. Actually since many years ago, building construction has been a significant part of our industrial field. If somebody asks what the most significant, most beautiful and most interesting of the past 1000 years is, there will be no single correct answer for this question. Some will choose the Eiffel Tower while others might choose the high skyscrapers as the most remarkable buildings.

The Fuller Building in New York is one of the world earliest skyscrapers which was built in 1902 with a height of 285 feet. A solid steel skeleton that has been used during the construction of this building allowed it to achieve record-breaking height without the need for wide supporting walls at the foundation. Examples of advanced construction building in the world now are the CCTV headquarters in China, Burj Khalifa in Dubai and the Iconic Tower in the new capital city of Egypt; the New Administrative City. With a total structural height of 385.8 metres, it is the tallest building in Africa. It will comprise 80 floors, mostly for office use, and is one of 20 towers being built as part of the Central business district in the new capital city. The new city is located 45 kilometres east of Cairo and just outside the Second Greater Cairo Orbital Road. According to the plans, the city will become the new administrative and financial capital of Egypt, housing the main government departments and ministries, as well as foreign embassies. On 700 square kilometres total area, it would have a population of 6.5 million people, though it is estimated that the figure could rise to seven million. Officially, a major reason for the undertaking of the project was to relieve congestion in Cairo, which is already one of the world's most crowded cities, with the population of Greater Cairo expected to double in the next few decades.

With increasing global environmental awareness, the importance of producing biodegradable plastics, papers, coatings, and other consumer materials is driving manufacturers to be ahead of the curve and gain market share for the future. The term biodegradable plastics refers to materials that maintain their mechanical strength during practical use but break down into low-weight compounds and non-toxic byproducts after their use. Plastics biodegrade at highly variable rates. The process of biodegradation can be divided into three stages: biodeterioration, biofragmentation, and assimilation. Biodeterioration is sometimes described as a surface-level degradation that modifies the mechanical, physical and chemical properties of the material. In architecture we are so caught up in creating something new, we often forget about what happens at the end of a building's life cycle—the unfortunate, inevitable demolition. We may want our buildings to be timeless and live on forever, but the harsh reality is that they do not, so where is all the waste expected to go? As with most non-recyclable waste, it ends up in the landfill and, as the land required for landfill becomes an increasingly scarce resource, we must find an alternative solution. Each year in the UK alone, 70–105 million tonnes of waste is created from demolishing buildings, and only 20% of that is biodegradable. Perhaps one of the biggest architectural crazes within the last few years, bamboo projects. But why has it become so popular? Bamboo can grow up to four feet a day, regrows after harvesting and is two to three times stronger than steel. As plastic accumulates in our oceans and rivers, it has become urgent that we both reduce our consumption and find cleaner, biodegradable alternatives.

Choose the best option from a, b, c or d:

91. The word biodegradable describes
a) toxic components
b) eco-friendly materials
c) dangerous products
d) biological weapons.

92. During practical use, biodegradable materials are

93. After you have already used a biodegradable bag, it
a) breaks down into low-weight compounds.
b) is very toxic to people especially children.
c) is very harmful to the environment.
d) can be used again and again.

94. About of the waste created from demolishing buildings is not biodegradable.
a) 20 %
b) 80 %
c) 70 %
d) 105 %

95. Manufacturers are the
a) people who use the biodegradable materials.
b) biodegradable materials made by factories.
c) men whose business is making things.
d) small factories in the big cities.

96. The underlined word 'accumulates' can be a synonym for
a) decade

Imagine you are driving your smart car along the highway, when suddenly something goes wrong with the engine. You don't know what the problem is, but you needn't worry. The engine will be examined by the computer in your car, which will find the cause of the problem. The computer will then connect to the internet to find the distance to the nearest garage where your car can be repaired. An email will then be sent to the garage to check that it has the parts that are needed for your car. If the garage has these, you will receive an email asking when you would like to take your car to the garage so that the parts can be replaced. When you are not driving your car, you can reply on your mobile phone, which will email your message to the garage. In this way, your car's engine problems can be solved.

Imagine that someone wants to drive a car faster than the rules say that you can. In a smart car, this cannot happen. The speed of the car is controlled by a special device. It doesn't matter what you do, it will be impossible to drive faster than what the device tells the engine. Experts have found that the number of serious road accidents will be reduced by having this device in the car, and thousands of lives will be saved every year. Is this just science fiction? No, the second device is currently being used. You can find information about it on the internet. The first device is likely to be used in a few years' time. In the future, it will be possible for technology to be used by everyone to solve engine problems and to keep everyone safe.

Choose the best option from a, b, c or d:

101. When something goes wrong with the engine,
a) it'll be examined by a mechanic who will be sent from a garage.
b) it'll be examined by the computer which will find the cause of the problem.
c) the engine will be removed.
d) it'll be replaced with a new one.

102. The computer will find the distance to the nearest garage because
a) it will connect to the internet.
b) someone will log onto the internet.
c) the driver will use the sat-nav system.
d) the garage is very near.

103. When the driver takes the car to the garage,
a) the garage will try to fix it.
b) the car will be sent to the main factory.
c) a specialist will look for the cause of the problem.
